

The acts of Robert I, second series.

Compiled by Matthew Hammond, 2018.

Note on dating: The enrolled documents which included a date of time were noted by A.A.M. Duncan in notes interspersed with the main run of numbered documents in RRS, v. These have been entered into the PoMS database as part of the first series of Robert I documents, which have been H-numbered chronologically. The following enrolled documents were not noted by Duncan precisely because the date of time was not copied. These have been given H-numbers based on their order in the rolls. The majority of these have been dated as between the inauguration of Robert I on 25 March 1306 and his death on 7 June 1329. The king issued very few dispositive documents before his victory at Bannockburn on 24 June 1314 and subsequent political stabilization of the kingdom. Therefore, most of the documents below are dated as ‘probably after 24 June 1314’. Occasionally, there are details given in the texts of the documents which allow a narrower date range, and here I am following Duncan’s notes in his indexed table of enrolled documents, RRS, v, 702-35. The index and roll references can also be found there.

23 August 1315 × 7 June 1329 (return of earldom of Fife to Duncan × death of King Robert)

Robert, king of Scots, since he has granted to his beloved and faithful Malcolm, earl of Lennox, the land of 'Strathoune' [Stratha'an, BNF] through the forfeiture of David of Strathbogie, knight, former earl of Atholl, at the time when Duncan, earl of Fife, of whom the land is held in chief, was acting against the king's peace, for which land Malcolm did homage to the king, and after this the king granted the earl of Fife all his lands and tenements with tenancies and freeholders in the kingdom of Scotland hereditarily, and since the said Malcolm by right is not held to do homage to the earl of Fife, he grants to the same earl of Fife the occasion of homage to him made by Malcolm for the same land, with wards, reliefs, or homages, or anything else pertaining to the earldom of Fife, no prejudice against he or his heirs is engendered, although he is free and quit of everything that was owed for the same in old times.
